Surah 25:1: Al-Furqân and “the warner”

From http://www.christoph-heger.de/sura25_1.html

Surah 25 ("al-furqân"), as it was transmitted, begins with the following verse:

tabâraka lladhî nazzala l-furqâna 'alâ 'abdihi li-yakûna li-l-âlamîna nadhîran

Usually it is translated like:

Blessed be He who sent down the furqân on His servant that he might be (or: become) a warner for the worlds understanding al-furqân as the Qur’ân and the "servant" as Muhammad.

For the Arabic text in Arabic script - presumably according to the Cairo standard edition of the Qur’an -, together with the comment (tafsîr) of four traditional exegetes cf. the following:

تبَارَكَ الَّذِي نَزَّلَ الْفُرْقَانَ عَلَى عَبْدِهِ لِيَكُونَ لِلْعَالَمِينَ نَذِيرًا

Commentaries:

Ibn Kathîr:

وَلَهَذا سمَّاهَا هَذَا الْفُرْقَانَ لَِِنَّهُ يَفْرُق بَيْن الْحَقّ وَالْبَاطِل وَالْهُدَى وَالْشَّاد وَالْحَلَََل وَالْحَرََام

Al-Jalâlayn:

"تَبَارَكَ" "تَعَالَى" الَّذِي نَزَّلَ الْفُرْقَان" "الْقُرْآن لَِِنَّهُ فَرَّقَ بَيْن الْحَقّ وَالْبَاطِل" "على عبده " مُحَمَّد لِلْعَالَمِينَ "الْإِنس وَالْجِنّ دُون الْمَلََائِكَة" نَذِيرًا مْعَوَّفً مِنْ عَذَاب اللَّّ

Al-Ṭabarî:

تبَارَكَ الَّذِي نَزَّلَ الْفَصْل بَيْن الْحَقّ وَالْبَاطِل، فَصْلًَ بَعْد فَصْل وَسُورَة بَعْد سُقورَة، عَلَقى عَبْدِه مُحَمَّد صَلَّى اللَّّ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمُ، لِيَكُون مُحَمَّد لِجَمِيعِ الْجِنّ وَالِْْنْس الَّذِينَ بَعَثَهُ اللَّّ إِلَههمْ دَاعِيًا إِلَّيْهِ، نَذِيرًا: يَعْنِي مُنْذِرًا يُنْذِرهُمْ عِقَابه وَيُخَوِّفهُمْ عَذَابه

Al-Qurṭubî:

وَ"الْفُرْقَان" "الْقُرْآن، وَقِيلَ: إِنَّهُ إِسْمٌ لَّكُل مَّنْزَل: كَمَا قَالَ: "وَلَقَدْ أَيْتَى مُوسَى وَهَارُونَ الْفُرْقَانَ [ "الْقُرْآن، ] "الأَلْبِينَاءَ، 48، 49]، وَفِي شَمَعِهِ فِرْقَانًا وَجَهَانِ: أَنَّهُمَا: لَتِنَّ فِرْقَ بَيْنِ الْحَقَّ وَالْبَاطِل، وَالْمُؤْمِن وَالْكَافِر، الثَّانِي: لَّأَنَّهُ تَبَارُكَ المَلِكُ مَنْ شَرَعَ مِنْ خَالِل وَخُرَام بِحَكَائِهِ النَّفِيقِ.

This traditional understanding presupposes the understanding of the word nadhîr as "warner". Both suppositions, the identification of furqân with the Qur’ân and the understanding of nadhîr as "warner", however are erroneous.
The classical Islamic understanding of the word furqān is al-fāṣl baʿna l-ḥaq wa-l-bāṭil, "separation between the truth and the vanity" (see Tabariy’s commentary on this verse), which by lots of translators correctly is rendered by "criterion". This meaning "criterion", usually maintained for furqān, results from the attempt to interpret the Syriac purqān(â)/furqān(â), which has the meaning of "redemption, salvation", in a way that relates both to the Arabic word farq meaning "separation" and to the contexts in which the word furqān is found.

For evidence that the Syriac word furqān(â) or purqān(â) actually has the meaning "salvation, redemption", even precisely "price of redemption", I refer to these standard dictionaries of the Syriac language:

As you may see, both dictionaries agree that furqân(â) / purqân(â) has the meaning of "liberatio" ("liberation"), "salvatio", "salus" (both meaning "salvation"), "redemptio" ("redemption") and especially "pretium redemptionis" ("price of the redemption").

As a learnt reader of my website, who is familiar with Jewish customs kindly pointed out to me, not only in Syriac (= Christian Aramaic), but also in Jewish Aramaic furqân(â)/purqân(â) is used in the sense of "salvation". The standard Jewish prayerbook, known as "The Complete Siddur" (ha Siddûr ha šalem), includes the prayer yeqûm purqan, "May salvation arise". According to a small explanatory footnote, provided in the presented edition, the prayer was composed [in Aramaic] in Babylonia prior to the adoption by the Jews there of Arabic as their daily language - so certainly no later than the 800s. Besides for the noun form PRQN the prayer contains also the verb form yitparqûn, “may they be saved”.

May salvation arise from heaven. May grace, kindness and mercy – long life, ample sustenance and divine aid; physical health, perfect vision, and healthy children who will never neglect the study of the Torah – be granted to our scholars and teachers, to the holy societies that are in the land of Israel in the land of Babylon, to the heads of the academies and the chiefs of the captivity, to the presidents of the colleges and the judges of the towns, to their disciples and the disciples of their disciples, and to all who study the Torah. May the King of the universe bless them, prolong their lives, increase their days and add to their years; may they be saved and delivered from all the stress and disease. May our Lord who is in heaven be their help at all times; and let us say, Amen.¹

There are 7 places in the Koran where the word furqân is used: surah 2:50, 181, 3:2, 8:29, 42, 21:49 and 25:1. It has already been remarked long ago that in all places but in surah 25:1 the understanding of furqân as "salvation", "liberation", "redemption" etc.

The later and meanwhile traditional identification of furqân with the Qur'an is especially odd in surah 25:1. It is most highly improbable that already in the - according to the views of traditional Islamic scholarship - earliest "revealed" verses the book which allegedly did not yet exist already has been addressed, even by its supposed later name.

The general evaluation of the alleged meaning "the Warner" for nadhîr is made possible by the etymological circumstances of this word. In all Semitic languages which functioned as vehicles for the transport of the Bible (and other religious material) to Arabia - Hebrew, Aramaic and Syriac - the root n-dh-r uniformly has the meaning of "to vow" or "that which is vowed". And so we have also in Arabic for the basic verb nadhara, in clear etymological relation to all other Semitic languages, the general and main meaning "to vow".

The noun nadhîr on account of its form fa'il is a verbal adjective or noun of predominantly passive participle meaning. The Arabic dictionaries, at least partly, indeed register the primary meaning "vowed", "votive gift" or "consecrated to God" (see for instance P. Bélot, Al-Faraïd. Arabe-Français, 17e édition, Beyrouth 1955, p. 817, right column), others register "warner", as does the traditional Qur'an exegesis. This peculiarity is excused with the traditional comment that in this case the word of this pattern fa'il has the meaning as if it were of the pattern muf'il (=mundhir, participle active of the IV. form of nadhara, which duly has the meaning "warner"). See for instance Lane, An Arabic-English Lexicon, London-Edinburgh 1863-1893.

The same lexica on the other hand report that the feminine variant of the masculine form nadhîr, which reads nadhîra, has the meaning "a votive gift": that which he gives who makes a vow, a child appointed by his parents by a vow to become a minister of the Church etc. (see Lane s.v.). This is quite peculiar: that the masculine noun nadhîr for those lexicographers should have a totally different meaning than the feminine noun of the same grammatical structure.

It can be seen from many phrases and examples of the usage of the word, how "to make someone vow" (IV. or causative form andhara) could change over to the meaning "to warn someone". Everybody who urges someone into a position where he has to make a vow brings this person into a difficult position and this can be paraphrased as "to warn him". But at the same time it becomes clear that "to warn" is not the real and basic meaning although it can - and this only with the causative (IV.) form andhara - get this secondary meaning in some cases.

Since nadhîr is a verbal adjective/noun of the basic (I.) form nadhara - and not the causative (IV.) form andhara - it should originally not have had the meaning "warner", but the same significance as registered for the feminine form nadhîra (which also can be understood as a nomen unitatis of the masculine noun), namely "votive gift" or "sacrifice". There is actually no text from pre-Islamic times where nadhîr is used with the meaning "warner". Passages in Old Arabic poetry - taking aside the question of its genuineness - on the contrary use the word in its etymologically correct meaning "something voted", "voted gift", "devoted one" etc.

In the end we come to the original meaning of 25:1, namely:

Blessed be He, who sent down the redemption on His servant that he might be (or: become) a sacrifice for the worlds.

Now 25:1 displays the central Christian teachings on Jesus Christ: "sent down" (John 1), "as votive sacrifice" (Eph. 5,1; Hebr. 10,10,14) "for the redemption" (Eph. 1,7 and often) "of the world" (John 3,17f.).
Additionally, the rasm of ‘âlamîna can be read as dual. And the dual "the two worlds" is theologically precise and correct since Christian theology sees the redemption brought about by Christ extending to the world of the living as well as to the world of the dead.

As a corollary we may remark: Also this verse displays the signs of the old pre-Islamic parts of the Qur’an, namely rhyme and metric pattern, as soon as one reads it as vernacular Arabic:

\begin{align*}
\text{tabâraka lladhî nazzala l-furqâna} \\
\text{'alâ 'abdah} \\
\text{li-yakûna li-l-âlamîna nadhîrâ}
\end{align*}

Blessed be He, who sent down the redemption on His servant
that he might become a sacrifice for the (two) worlds.
